A strong foundation in many disciplines will increase your skill in written and oral communication and critical thinking. The B.U.S. degree can be tailored to include areas of study that most apply to your professional career objectives.

The bachelor of university studies (B.U.S.) online degree program is intended for transfer students who have completed previous coursework at a two-or four-year college or university. The B.U.S. degree provides flexibility for students who wish to determine the content of their degree rather than pursue a specific major. Each student will design a program leading to specific educational goals, but not necessarily within any one department. This provides a flexible and adaptable degree based on your individual needs and previously completed coursework.

The Program

This flexible degree is available to students who wish to structure their own program of study while selecting classes that are valuable for their personal goals. This degree could be the right fit for you if you are not sure which program of study you prefer.

The online B.U.S. program allows you to draw from a number of different online coursework options; including business; early childhood; education; mathematics; library media and information science; and health, physical education, and recreation. Students should note that the B.U.S. degree does not qualify the graduate for teacher certification.

Students who previously attended college and did not earn a degree for whatever reason will find this program allows them to return and complete their education. The bachelor of university studies program at MSU is very transfer-friendly.

Any coursework previously earned from regionally accredited institutions will be accepted and applied to the B.U.S. core requirements, general education, optional minor, and electives as appropriate, regardless of the academic program in which the student was previously enrolled.
